Hesperin is 'exceptional' teacher but not top choice, principal says Voorhees High School graduate Matthew Hesperin still talks about the time when he was named the high school's "teacher of the year" by his fellow teachers, an honor earned by making "lasting impression" on his students. "It's a very good feeling," said the 22-year-old senior at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business who recently gave back his teaching position after four months of post-graduate study. "It's such a nice feeling to have something like that. It's something I will have for the rest of my life." Power systems such as electric motor drive systems often operate at low frequency. Motors in such low-frequency systems may operate at 500 Hz or 600 Hz. The motors operate in the background, and operate constantly and automatically without any need for active human monitoring. Motor fault management is a typical task of the power systems and of component systems within the systems, such as the electric motor. Electric motors have faults that may affect their operation. A fault may be a short or a ground fault. A fault may also be a hot wire or a bad contact. While these faults are detectable, they should be identified and reported, and the faults should be corrected. In one example, a method of detecting a fault and reporting the fault to a user is described. In this example, a motor is operated for a first time period (referred to as a “first cycle”) and a voltage and/or current of the motor is measured for the first cycle. In addition, for one time period during the first cycle the motor is cycled to a stop, and the motor is then restarted. The voltage and/or current of the motor for the second cycle (referred to as a “second cycle”) is measured. The method then detects if the second cycle has a larger voltage or current than the first cycle. Also, if the greater cycle is a continuous cycle, it is determined if the motor has a larger change in voltage than the first cycle. Grindr, which was previously called Jack’d, has officially sold for $50 million to IAC. “Grindr will continue to operate as it has for the last decade, and we look forward to working together with IAC as they continue to innovate on behalf of the consumers,” CEO
