The present invention relates to a process for the preparation of a lubricating oil and to a lubricating oil preparation containing the product of this process as a friction-reducing and anti-wear agent. Highly refined lubricating oils which have good anti-wear and friction-reducing properties are difficult to obtain by conventional refining. The lubricating oils which come into contact with the inside of the bearing members in the bearing parts, in particular those which are combined with disc brakes, for example, of motor vehicles, are generally prepared by two successive steps, namely a so-called preliminary step in which a lubricating oil base stock is prepared and a finishing step in which additives are added and the prepared lubricating oil base stock is finished to obtain a lubricating oil which is ready for use. The preliminary step includes the preparation of lubricating oil base stock of very good quality. The base stock is prepared by mixing together base oil and additives such as antioxidants, metal deactivators, extreme pressure additives, metal deactivators, pour point depressants and acid-neutralizing agents, and possibly by mixing together other additives such as anti-oxidants and metal deactivators. The properties of the lubricating oil base stock are usually studied, and a product is chosen which on the one hand has a high quality but on the other hand has good economic availability. For example, the properties of lubricating oil base stocks based on mineral oils are described, for example, in G. D. Luxon, "Lubrication by Mineral Oils" in "Petroleum Refining", Academic Press, 1966, pages 104-154. The properties of lubricating oils based on mineral oils are also described, for example, in ISO standard 5765, "Petroleum products - Classification of lubricating oils - Classification according to viscosity" and in the following publications: EP-A-136 276, EP-A-176 461, EP-A-176 463, U.S. Pat. No. 3,567,396 and DE-A-29 37 864. In general, the base stock of the lubricating oil is prepared by complicated and difficult processes, the methods of

Once activated you can use it in place of any other .The life and times of an Aussie girl Tag Archives: school station We're half way through the year, and two of my oldest students have been diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes. Since I got the news, I've done a lot of research on the disease and what causes it. A lot of the comments came from one particular area - the physical exercise side of the disease. "If they don't exercise they will get Type 2 diabetes." "If they don't get Type 2 diabetes, they'll exercise". These were the sort of comments I received in email. I understand why some people would think this way. My kids are not "little fat kids". They are "big, strong, athletic children" that do a lot of physical activity, around the house and on-field. And yes they do enjoy their food and at times I even have to stop them if they are going over their calorie limit for the day. But they love their food, and they love playing sports. They like to eat, it's just that a LOT of time they spend in the kitchen is doing homework. Since our family history includes obesity, I knew it was something to be aware of, especially with my daughter that was just confirmed with a Type 2 diagnosis. Even though we eat out a LOT in the year, every Friday night is pizza night. We also have a regular weekly order with takeaway pizza on a Tuesday. They are almost always ordered to go. I don't know how many times we've had a kid order a lunch box with "just white bread, ham and cheese" for school, a ham and cheese lunch box that has 600 calories in it. Yes, they may like their food, but it's not natural food and they don't eat the recommended five fruit and veges every day, plus two pieces of protein. They do get three (if the freezer's been stocked properly) packets of muesli, and sometimes two packets. Their daily fruit amounts aren't great either. Yes, they are getting enough calcium. The
